

Berrit Kvorning: Performance – English Version

Comments from participants

Many employees and managers struggle with nervousness, unclear speech and incongruent body language, when they have to perform and present in front of others. Working with Berrit Kvorning as a trainer can improve this tremendously. She is skilled at bringing the best out of people and challenging them at the right pace. With high energy and strong examples she embodies and exemplifies in a way that is easy for her participants to relate to and take in. Seeing people develop from giving weak presentations to delivering present and engaging presentations is impressive.”

As part of our course on becoming a museum guide at The Natural History Museum of Denmark, Berrit did a half day seminar on the subject of performance. We have a lot of different types of groups coming through our museum, and it is important that the museum guides connect with people regardless of age, interest or knowledge base and keep them interested whilst visiting us. Our focus for the seminar was oral presentation, personal performance, body language and being a phenomenal host and representative of our museum.

Berrit introduced us to some very useful tools. During the seminar, the tools were described and applied one by one. We all had a chance to engage and receive personal feedback. The results were instant and obvious at the end of the day. Improving performance and communication skills is a learning process. Berrit gave us a set of tools that we still return to for brushing up and for giving/receiving feedback, to continue learning and improving.”
